

Thursday, November 15th, 2007

A Pod Full of Peas \(and rice and cookies and soup and crackers...\)

Maureen at Samica Bags has found a way to “save the earth in style” with her Grocery Pods! Samica Bags’ mission is to educate adults and children on using sustainable products.

I love my grocery pod, and I must admit, I was surprised at just how much it holds! It’s made from strong, durable fabric in a variety of stylish colors and patterns. These pods are constructed in a circular design, making the most use of every inch of space. You’ll be amazed at how much these pods hold.

The Samica Bags website is full of information and articles on recycling, plastic bags, and carbon offset. After reading, you’ll definitely want to do your part to cut down on plastic bag usage. I especially like these grocery pods because I do most of my shopping at Aldi (a store where you either have to buy bags, or bring your own bags from home).

These bags can also be used as school bags and tote bags or for packing a picnic lunch and carrying library books. And don’t forget to check out the new unique and stylish handbags while you’re browsing!

Dawn

Dawn Meehan

Mamas Like is a product review blog that is dedicated to showcasing products and services by and for work-at-home moms.