Saving the Earth, the stylin' way

“Paper or plastic?” The right answer is “Got my Pods, thanks!” That’s “pods” as in Grocery Pods, the hot new everything-from-celery-to-soft-shell-crab-schleppers created by mom-entrepreneur Maureen Ramos of Samica Bags in Naples, Florida.

The Grocery Pod is a round, reusable, washable, fabric grocery bag that’s both fashionable and environmentally friendly. It comes in an eye-popping range of patterns and colors, from demure to dazzling.

Using Grocery Pods instead of petroleum-based plastic grocery bags or paper bags can help save our endangered planet. Plastic bags are "urban tumbleweeds" that litter oceans, farms, and streets while destroying Earth’s natural resources. Livestock, birds, turtles and other marine life are perishing by ingesting them. Paper bags aren’t much better: their production emits airborne toxins.

For eco-conscious shoppers, Grocery Pods are the stylish alternative. Here’s what a California user had to say about her Pods: "AMAZING! I LOVE the fabrics...even more vibrant than on the website and they hold a bunch of stuff...not just for the market, these are park bags, going to Grandma's bags, library bags, to and from school bags, etc. They just look GREAT and that's what you want when you're fighting the Grocery Store Battle! Thank you for...producing such quality products and incredibly fast delivery! "
